Job Description:

The successful candidate will be a member of a Group of physics of strongly correlated materials. He/she should carry out the research on various properties of novel electronic phases in condensed matter, such as, for example, surface states and disorder-induced features in Dirac systems, electronic states in low-dimensional superconducting systems, or proximity effects; he/she should actively search for novel directions of studies, and apply for external funding for research and for the development of experimental apparatus. It is expected that he/she will also engage in collaboration with other group members in an on-going research on thin superconducting films and structures built of various strongly correlated materials. The activities directed towards development of new experimental methods in the area of condensed matter physics will be very welcome.

The candidate should have experience in conducting research in the field of experimental condensed matter physics, documented by publications. The candidate should have experience in organizational activities in science (PI in at least one grant).
